

EDUCATIONAL APPROACH

Earning an associate degree at Heald is much more than just skill training. A Heald education can provide students with all of the resources necessary to become well-rounded, highly motivated, qualified candidates for great jobs.

In addition to taking courses in their chosen program area, Heald students may study contemporary literature and culture, ethical practices, and personal and social responsibility. Instructors help them develop confidence, leadership abilities, collaboration techniques, and communication skills. While employers are eager to find employees with technical proficiency, these "soft" skills are extremely important in a professional environment.

The Heald faculty consists of people who know what it means to be in the workforce. Heald hires high-caliber instructors who have both academic and real-world experience. They teach practical, relevant skills that students will actually be able to use throughout their careers.

But before that career starts, the Heald faculty and staff want the students' time at Heald to be the best it can be. Heald campuses are supportive environments filled with positive, like-minded people. At least, that's what Heald graduates say. It's the sense of belonging to a community they had at Heald that they remember most.

For more information, please contact Heald College at 1-800-88-HEALD or visit www.heald.edu.